BOOK INTRODUCTION

Some letters are never meant to be sent. Some are written not for the world, but for the soul that aches to speak.

Love, in its purest form, is the greatest act of human dignity a quiet rebellion against loneliness, a declaration that every heart deserves to be seen, heard, and cherished. Yet, life does not always grant us the courage to say what our hearts know. Sometimes, the words we long to speak remain locked inside us, guarded by fear, silenced by circumstance.

This is not a tale of perfect endings or flawless love. It is the story of two souls who found each other in the unlikeliest of moments, only to be separated by the tides of time and the weight of things left unsaid. It is about the letter I wrote in the darkest hour of longing a letter I never sent, because I believed it was kinder to keep the truth to myself.

Years have passed. Seasons have changed. And yet, the letter remains. In its silence lies the weight of memories too precious to erase and too fragile to hold.
